Prince's Trust Shoot, Sandringham

"GOOD Lord, they've got a lady on the team!" expostulated one of the competitors as the winners (by a substantial margin) stepped up to collect first prize at the Prince's Trust shoot at the Old Shooting Ground, Sandringham.

Organised by Holt's the auctioneers, the event had attracted not only a host of glossy sponsors but some extremely serious shots from London to do battle with five fiendish flushes designed by Richard Clarke. With the Twelfth then round the corner, most guns had hoped to put in a decent score on the Walked-Up Grouse to make up for the egos dented on Vermin Corner – a horrid medley of Various targets – but found these were not the cheepery birds of August but the Mach 3 feathery rockets of late October.

None of this fazed the winning team, however. Sponsored by David Gorton, it consisted of three keepers – Gareth Maund of the Le Strange estate; Jonathan Maughan of Walsingham, Co Durham; and Andy Coulson of East Allenheads, plus Louise Stimson, one of The Field's 75 top shots. Together, they demonstrated what daily familiarity with a gun could achieve.

And no one should have been surprised by the competence of the team's lady, given where the shoot was held. Its owner, the first in the land, has always demonstrated there's no weaker sex.
